RARE SPIRITS

Our curated collection of rare and emotionally resonant spirits—bottles chosen not just for their quality, but for the stories they carry. These pours are reflective, evocative, sometimes even haunting—crafted in small quantities, often never to be made again. Whether it's a forgotten distillery, a singular vintage, or a spirit born from tradition and struggle, each one offers a profound, personal encounter. It's a chance to taste something that lingers far beyond the glass.

VINTAGE AMARI Limited Quantities

We proudly offer a rare and subliminal experience: vintage amari. These aged herbal liqueurs undergo a quiet transformation over time, where once-bold botanicals mellow and intertwine. Through years of rest, their complex molecules create a unique symbiosis—bitterness softens, sweetness deepens, and new layers emerge. The result is not just a drink, but a living memory in a glass—one that speaks to patience, alchemy, and timeless Italian elegance. Let us pour you something unforgettable.

Lombardia

This wineregion has a long but often overshadowed history with Nebbiolo. In Lombardia, Nebbiolo—locally known as Chiavennasca—thrives in the alpine terroir of Valtellina. Here, steep, terraced vineyards produce elegant, mineral-driven expressions of the grape. Though less powerful than its Barolo or Barbaresco counterparts, these wines are still prized for their age-worthiness, and distinct mountain character.

Our journey with sake runs deep — shaped in no small part by Stuart Morris, Master of Sake and former sake director at MINA Group. Many of us, including Carlo Splendorini, had the privilege of working alongside Stuart, and it was under his guidance that our appreciation evolved from curiosity to craft.

Friuli-Venezia Giulia

Tucked between the Adriatic Sea and the soaring Alps, Friuli Venezia Giulia stands apart as one of Italy's most distinctive and dynamic wine regions. This northeastern frontier is a cultural and climatic crossroads — and it shows in the glass. From the crisp, saline minerality of Friulano to the intensely aromatic Pinot Grigio and the textural intrigue of Ribolla Gialla, the whites here are anything but conventional. The reds, too, surprise with their finesse, structure, and quiet power. This is not just Italian wine — it's Friulian, and that makes all the difference.

Piemonte

Nebbiolo: Italy's Noble Grape Nebbiolo is the ethereal, pale-hued powerhouse of Piedmont—high in tannin, lifted by bright acidity, and perfumed with roses, cherry, tar, and truffle. Few grapes communicate their origin with such purity, which is why its finest expressions shine across four iconic appellations: Gattinara, Langhe, Barbaresco, and Barolo.

Gattinara emerges from the cool, alpine-influenced hills of Alto Piemonte, where volcanic soils and mountain breezes shape Nebbiolo into a taut, mineral-driven wine. Expect aromas of rose, sour cherry, smoke, and iron, wrapped in bright acidity and fine yet firm tannins. Gattinara offers a noble, precise, age-worthy expression—elegant, lifted, and uniquely northern.

Langhe Nebbiolo serves as the most approachable gateway to the grape. Crafted from younger vines or parcels outside the top crus, these wines emphasize freshness and purity: vibrant red fruit, floral notes, and supple tannins. It's Nebbiolo's charm without the wait, delivering authenticity in a more easygoing frame.

Barbaresco strikes a beautiful balance of refinement and approachability. Slightly warmer conditions and shorter aging requirements produce wines that are aromatic, silky, and often ready to enjoy earlier than their Barolo counterparts. Look for violets, cherry, sweet spice, and polished tannins that glide across the palate with grace.

Barolo, finally, shows Nebbiolo at its most powerful and long-lived. Its patchwork of soils and traditional long aging forge wines with formidable structure and profound depth—firm tannins, layers of cherry, rose, licorice, and earth—and the capacity to evolve for decades. Barolo is the monument of the region, the standard by which Nebbiolo's greatness is often measured.

Nebbiolo is revered as the best of the best in Italian wine because no other Italian grape offers such harmony of perfume, transparency, structure, and longevity. From the volcanic precision of Gattinara to the grandeur of Barolo, Nebbiolo doesn't merely express terroir—it transforms it into art.

Sardegna

In the sun-kissed expanse of Sardegna's island wine region, where azure waters meet rugged landscapes, a unique terroir lends its magic to winemaking. Here, amidst ancient vineyards that stretch across rolling hills and coastal plains, sea salt kisses the grape clusters, imparting a distinctive minerality to the wines.

VINI IN GRANDE FORMATO

Step into our large format wine section and discover a world where time-honored tradition meets the art of preservation. Here, large formats hold court, offering not only an impressive display but also a secret to superior aging. In these larger vessels, wine ages gracefully, benefiting from a slower maturation process that allows flavors to meld and complexities to deepen over time, worthy of celebration.

Sicilia

South in the heart of the Mediterranean Sea, Sicilia's wine region is a captivating tapestry of history, culture, and volcanic terroir. With the majestic Mount Etna as its backdrop, this picturesque landscape boasts vineyards that cling to the slopes of Europe's tallest active volcano. Here, indigenous grape varieties like Nero d'Avola and Carricante thrive in the fertile volcanic soils, producing wines of unparalleled complexity and character.

GATTINARA NEBBIOLO

Gattinara, from northern Piedmont's Vercelli province, grows on volcanic soils and produces wines of firm structure, bright acidity, and minerality. These wines often show floral, earth, and iron notes, and they age exceptionally well.

BARBARESCO

Barbaresco and Barolo are two of Italy's most iconic wines, both crafted from the Nebbiolo grape in the Piedmont region, yet they express distinct personalities due to differences in terroir, climate, and aging requirements.

Barbaresco, benefits from a milder climate and maritime influence, which allows the grapes to ripen earlier. The result is a wine that's more approachable in its youth—softer, more delicate, and aromatic—with a minimum aging requirement of 24 months (9 in oak).

Barolo comes from a higher elevation area with a slightly cooler climate, resulting in wines that are more powerful, structured, and tannic. It's often described as bold and brooding, with a traditional minimum aging requirement of 38 months (18 in oak), and many producers age it longer.

While both exhibit classic Nebbiolo notes—rose, cherry, earth, and truffle—Barolo leans toward a more muscular, age-worthy expression, while Barbaresco tends to be more refined, elegant, and accessible earlier. Think of Barolo as the stately king and Barbaresco as the graceful queen of Piedmont.

Abruzzo

Centrally in the rugged beauty of Italy, the Abruzzo wine region is a hidden gem waiting to be discovered. Framed by the majestic peaks of the Gran Sasso mountain range, this picturesque landscape is home to vineyards that cling to steep slopes and sun-kissed valleys. Here, amidst the wild beauty of nature, indigenous grape varieties like Montepulciano d'Abruzzo thrive, producing wines of exceptional depth.

Lazio

The Lazio wine region boasts a rich history and a vibrant winemaking tradition. Home to the iconic city of Rome, Lazio's vineyards sprawl across rolling hills and volcanic soils, producing wines that reflect the region's unique terroir and ancient heritage. From the crisp, refreshing Frascati to the mineral driven Passerina, Lazio offers a diverse range of varieties to tantalize the palate.

PIEMONTE BAROLO

Barbaresco and Barolo are two of Italy's most iconic wines, both crafted from the Nebbiolo grape in the Piedmont region, yet they express distinct personalities due to differences in terroir, climate, and aging requirements.

Barolo comes from a higher elevation area with a slightly cooler climate, resulting in wines that are more powerful, structured, and tannic. It's often described as bold and brooding, with a traditional minimum aging requirement of 38 months (18 in oak), and many producers age it longer.

Barbaresco, benefits from a milder climate and maritime influence, which allows the grapes to ripen earlier. The result is a wine that's more approachable in its youth—softer, more delicate, and aromatic—with a minimum aging requirement of 24 months (9 in oak).

While both exhibit classic Nebbiolo notes—rose, cherry, earth, and truffle—Barolo leans toward a more muscular, age-worthy expression, while Barbaresco tends to be more refined, elegant, and accessible earlier. Think of Barolo as the stately king and Barbaresco as the graceful queen of Piedmont.
